

American Politics

POL 110/American Government

1 course unit

(fall and spring)

Examines the strengths and weaknesses, problems and promise of representative democracy in the United States. Surveys the relationships of citizens to Congress, the president and the courts through political parties, elections, interest groups, and the media. Considers the constitutional framework of government and the rights of the individual against governmental intrusion.

POL 207/Citizen Democracy

1 course unit

(occasionally)

Practical experience in, and study of, local political processes from the viewpoint of citizen activism. A project-driven course where students work with community organizations to research important issues of public policy, study the practical workings of real political processes, and evaluate the relationship of public officials to their constituents.

POL 215/Gender and Politics

1 course unit

(occasionally)

The role of gender in politics is examined in a lecture/discussion format. Topics include research on gender, differences and similarities in political socialization and electoral behavior, gender-related issues in public policy, the role of gender in the decision making of public officials, and the relationship between theories of gender and the actual practice of politics.

POL 300/Politics and Public Management

1 course unit

(every other fall)

An examination of the field of public administration focusing on the external and internal factors that shape the performance of public agencies, the interaction of public agencies and their leaders with the presidency, Congress and the courts, and the administrative skills public administrators need to manage a public organization.

POL 305/ Public Policy Analysis

1 course unit

(fall)

An examination of the policy-making process, the important domestic policies that have resulted, and the evaluation of these policies. The course covers substantive issues of contemporary public policy in such areas as the environment, health care, welfare, the economy, crime, education, and regulation. The course also trains students in the methods of policy analysis with a focus on designing research projects to estimate the causal effects of public policies.

POL 311/The Presidency and Congress

1 course unit

(fall)

Problems of the modern American presidency and of the U.S. Congress, with an emphasis upon interrelationships and consequences for the national policy-making process.

POL 315/Parties, Interest Groups, and the Media

1 course unit

(every other spring)

An examination of the role of political parties, interest groups, and the media as intermediaries between citizens and formal governmental institutions. The course will focus on the role of parties, interest groups, and the media in leadership recruitment, issue formulation, and public policy making.

POL 316/Public Opinion, Voting, and Elections

1 course unit

(spring)

A study of the origins, content, and impact of citizen attitudes on the U.S. political system. Particular attention will be given to the impact of public opinion, along with other factors, on voting and elections.

POL 318/Politics of Community Change 1 course unit
(occasionally)

The political implications of the evolution of cities and suburbs. Includes the study of local politics, geography, demography, and economics applied to selected public policy issues such as redevelopment, sprawl, the environment, poverty, public safety, and education. The course includes instruction in Geographical Information Systems (GIS) and use of GIS skills in an analytical mapping project serving the needs of one or more community partners.

POL 320/Constitutional Law 1 course unit
(fall)

An analysis of how the U.S. Supreme Court interprets the Constitution, focusing on the issues of how much power the U.S. Congress, president and courts should have and how the U.S. government should interrelate with the state governments.

POL 321/Civil Rights and Liberties 1 course unit
(spring)

An analysis of how the U.S. Supreme Court interprets the Constitution, focusing on the rights of the individual, including freedom of expression, freedom of religion, the right of privacy, due process of law, and equal protection of the laws.

POL 323/Law and Society 1 course unit
(spring)

An examination of what law is, the sources of law, and the impact of law on society and the individual. Examines internal aspects of the legal system, such as legal reasoning and the structure of the legal profession, as well as external factors such as the economic system and social structure, in order to illustrate the dynamic relationship between law and the society in which it exists.

POL 324/ Moot Court 1 course unit
(fall)

This course prepares students to participate in a regional moot court competition where they deliver oral arguments before the "Supreme Court." The topic changes annually in response to the moot court problem case, but the primary focus is on public speaking, making logical arguments, and delivering those points in compelling oral rhetoric. Students will travel to the regional competition, and if successful, compete in a national competition. Prerequisite: Permission of the Instructor. Course may be repeated for credit, but may be counted only twice toward the Political Science major.

POL 328/State and Local Government in New Jersey 1 course unit
(alternate years)

This course provides an analysis of the institutions, the political processes, and the resultant policies of state and local government in New Jersey. Particular attention is given to the structure of state, county, and local government, related political organizations, the nature of politics in New Jersey, and the impact of the state's cultural, economic, political, and social characteristics on political decision-making and public policy at the state and local level.

International Politics

POL 230/International Relations 1 course unit
(fall and online in the summer and winter)

An examination of contemporary patterns of international interaction and their historic roots with attention to competing theoretical perspectives. Topics studied include foreign policy, international law and organization, and international political economy.

POL 330/U.S. Foreign Policy 1 course unit
(fall)

Examines the formulation and execution of American foreign policy in the context of American politics and of the United States' historic role in the world; some themes considered include the domestic sources of foreign policy and the conditions under which the United States uses force abroad.

POL 335/International Organization 1 course unit
(fall)

This class analyzes the role of norms, inter-governmental institutions and non-governmental organizations in modifying the behavior of states and other actors in the international system.

POL 337/International Law 1 course unit
(occasionally)

International legal principles concerning international legal personality, jurisdiction over persons and places, diplomatic and consular relations, treaties, war, and relations at sea and in space.

POL 345/Human Rights in International Relations 1 course unit
(alternate years)

(same as INT 300)

Pre INT 200, POL 230, any 200-Level PHL course is a prerequisite or permission of instructor
Examines the evolution of human rights movements since World War II and their influence on the behavior of nation states and other transnational actors. Includes discussion of human rights in American foreign policy, and the role of non-state actors such as intergovernmental institutions, multinational corporations, and non-governmental organizations, selected regional and current topics such as: women's rights, terrorism, self-determination, globalization, and humanitarian intervention.

POL 355/ Political Economy of Natural Resources 1 course unit
(Occasionally)

(same as INT 355)

This course is designed to give advanced undergraduates an introduction to scholarship on the politics of natural resources use. It combines theoretical material with study of a wide range of detailed cases—cases that vary by the type of natural resource (minerals, water, forests), by the geographical (and to some degree, historical) setting, and by the level of analysis (local, national, and international). Though the course is focused on political questions, it draws on scholarship from economics, history, and geography.

POL 380/International Political Economy 1 course unit
(spring)

(same as ECO 380)

A study of the politics of international economic relations. Economic theories of international trade and finance are presented in the context of their political origins and implications. Includes review of primary analytical perspectives, historical developments, and major contemporary institutions and processes bearing on the politics of international economics

Comparative Politics

POL 150/Introduction to Comparative Politics 1 course unit
(spring)

Introduces students to some of the most important concepts, themes and approaches in the comparative study of politics. Comparative Politics is the study of the domestic or internal politics of particular countries. By comparing the processes, institutions and other political phenomena of one country in relation to others, those engaged in the study of comparative politics isolate the primary causes and consequences of these political phenomena and are thus able to create and test theories of politics around the world.

POL 250/Politics and Society in Developing Countries 1 course unit

(fall)

Examines political trends, patterns, and variations in the developing world, drawing examples from countries throughout Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Middle East. Primary questions include colonialism's impact the future political, economic and social development, strong versus weak states and regimes, and role of identity politics in these countries. The latter part of the course examines politics in four specific countries: Brazil, India, Nigeria and South Korea.

POL 350/Politics in Europe 1 course unit

(fall)

Examines government, politics, and society in the major European nations including but not necessarily limited to the United Kingdom, France, and the Federal Republic of Germany.

POL 352/Comparative Political Economy of Development 1 course unit

(occasionally)

Prerequisites: POL 150 or POL 250 or ECO 335 or INT 200

An examination, within the framework of the comparative political economy of development literature, of a sample of developing countries and their efforts to develop economically and politically.

POL 357/Middle East Politics 1 course unit

(fall)

An examination of the politics of Middle Eastern and North African states from a comparative historical perspective. The principal focus is on the challenges and constraints that Middle Eastern societies have faced in their efforts to create modern nation-states. Topics include imperialist intervention in the region, post-Colonial state-building experiences, and the role of Islam in domestic politics.

POL 358/Latin American Politics 1 course unit

(alternate years)

An examination of the contemporary political, economic, and social structures of Latin American countries through a comparative-historical lens. Emphasis is on transformative shifts from state-led economies to free market (and perhaps back again), from military authoritarian governments to democracies, and from a focus on class identities to a greater role for racial and ethnic identities in politics.

Political Theory

POL 275/Western Political Philosophy 1 course unit

(spring)

Selected political questions that have intrigued Western society from time immemorial and theoretical solutions presented by some of the great political philosophers from classical Greece to the modern era.

POL 365/Origins of the U.S. Constitution 1 course unit

(same as HIS 366)

(fall)

An examination of the political theories, people, social and economic forces, events, and political context that influenced the framing and ratification of the U.S. Constitution and Bill of Rights.

POL 372/History of American Political Ideas 1 course unit

(spring)

Follows the evolution of ideas of major American political theorists and politicians, concerning the individual, community, and world, to develop a framework for evaluating contemporary political thought and practice.

Special Courses

POL 170/Topics in Political Science 1 course unit

(occasionally)

Current or specialized topic proposed by faculty or students and approved by the department. Open to and appropriate for first-year students. The course may be repeated for credit if content differs.

POL 200/Political Analysis 1 course unit

(fall and spring)

The course familiarizes students with the basic statistical, conceptual, and technical skills needed for research in political science. Topics include research design, hypothesis testing, statistical methodology common in the social sciences, and practical experience examining and analyzing quantitative data. This course provides students hands-on training with Stata, a commonly used statistical software package. Should normally be completed by the end of the sophomore year prior to taking POL 390.

POL 270/Topics in Political Science 1 course unit

(occasionally)

Current or specialized topic proposed by faculty or students and approved by the department. Designed for Sophomores, Juniors, and Seniors. It may not be appropriate for freshman. The course may be taken for credit several times if content differs each time.

POL 370/Topics in Political Science 1 course unit

(fall and spring)

Current or specialized topics proposed by faculty or students and approved by the department. Offered primarily for juniors and seniors. It may not be appropriate for freshman and sophomores. The course may be taken for credit several times if content differs each time.

POL 390/Tutorial in Political Science 1 course unit

(fall and spring)

Prerequisite: Junior status, POL 200, completion of WRI 102 if required

An intensive study under close faculty supervision of a particular topic or problem in political science through extensive readings, class discussions and the sequential development of different components of a research paper. Emphasis on the development of the student's depth of knowledge and understanding of scholarly issues through a close professional relationship between tutor and student. The topics of the class vary by instructor.

POL 391/Independent Study in Political Science variable course units

(fall and spring)

Prerequisite: Student proposals must be approved by the Political Science Department prior to registration

Independent reading or research pursued under supervision of a department advisor; project proposals may be presented by upper-level students who have completed two units of 300 and 400 level political science courses.

POL 395/Group Research in Political Science 1 course unit

(occasionally)

Prerequisites: POL 200 and Permission of the Instructor

Students conduct research under faculty supervision as part of a faculty research project. The professor determines topic, problem, research design and relevant sources. Students unearth and analyze primary and secondary sources and report on findings orally and in writing.

POL 399/Internship in Public Affairs 1 course unit

(fall, spring, summer)

Prerequisite: Permission of intern supervisor

This course provides an opportunity for students to integrate theory with practical work experience in public affairs under the supervision of a field supervisor and a faculty coordinator. Work settings include but are not limited to the Governor's Office, legislative offices, state departments, lobbying firms, trade or union organizations, political campaigns and parties, and non-profit organizations. The College has cooperative arrangements with programs in Washington, D.C.

POL 401/TCNJ Washington Internship 1-2 course units

(2 units in fall and spring; one unit in summer)

Prerequisites: Sophomore, junior, or senior status, 3 units in Political Science, and a 3.0 GPA.

A 32-35 hour a week internship with a congressional office, government agency, foundation, interest group, or other organization in Washington D.C. that is available as part of the TCNJ Washington Semester Program. Placement is arranged through The Washington Center for Internships and Academic Seminars. Taken with POL 402 and POL 403 and earns TCNJ resident credit. Together these courses afford students the opportunity to pursue internships, course work and enrichment activities during a semester in the Washington D.C. area.

POL 402/TCNJ Washington Coursework 1 course unit

(fall, spring, or summer)

Prerequisites: Sophomore, junior, or senior status, 3 units in Political Science, and 3.0 GPA.

A traditional academic course selected from a range of offerings provided as part of the TCNJ Washington Semester Program and through The Washington Center for Internships and Academic Seminars. Topics relate to the internship placement. Taken with POL 401 and POL 403 and earns TCNJ resident credit.

POL 403/TCNJ Washington Leadership Seminar 1 course unit

(fall, spring, and summer)

Taken as an ungraded course

Prerequisites: Sophomore, junior, or senior status, 3 units in Political Science, and 3.0 GPA.

Provides professional and career development activities organized as part of the TCNJ Washington Semester Program by The Washington Center for Internships and Academic Seminars. Includes the production of a portfolio that documents this work and participation in additional enrichment activities (speaker series, community service, etc.) Taken with POL 401 and POL 402 and earns TCNJ resident credit.

POL 495/Honors Thesis in Political Science 1 course unit

(fall and spring)

Prerequisite: Political Science major, senior status, completion of POL 390, with 3.5 overall GPA and 3.5 GPA in major

Research and writing of a senior thesis for students accepted into the departmental honors program. Application is made during the junior year. Oral presentation is made to an appropriate audience.

POL 498/Seminar in Political Science 1 course unit

(fall and spring)

Prerequisite: Senior status, POL 390

Advanced study through individual research and formal seminar reports on topics of special interest to seminar participants. May be repeated for credit.